Our newsletter for the local community

Issue 8, 2019

Imperial College
London

In this issue:

- // The local women helping to transform their communities through Agents of Change
- // Learn more about our upcoming activities and events
- // Competition: do you know this mystery garden?

A Maker Challenge participant showcases their creation at the finale in April.

Hello!

Welcome to the eighth issue of Imperial College London's community newsletter for local residents, businesses and organisations in and around White City.

Welcome to the summer edition of our community newsletter!

In this issue, we'll be meeting the incredible local women behind the Agents of Change women's network in White City – a fantastic local initiative that supports female community leaders to drive positive change in their communities. The Agents of Change network is unique in the UK and is supported by a partnership of local organisations, including Imperial. Learn about the impact the network has made and the opportunities for getting involved.

Also, in this issue, you can find out more about some of the fantastically exciting projects we've supported in the local community over the past few months, such as our interactive workshops to celebrate 150 years of the Periodic Table. We have lots more family and interactive events planned over the summer in our new café and garden space at The Invention Rooms, so make sure to register for our email updates and follow us on Twitter @InventionRooms.

Have a lovely summer – we hope to see you soon,

Professor Maggie Dallman
Vice-President (International) and
Associate Provost (Academic Partnerships)

News from Imperial

Plight of the bumblebee

Research from Imperial has found that bees exposed to pesticides don't fly as far as other bees. The study showed that bees exposed to a common type of pesticide – called a neonicotinoid – fly shorter distances and for less time. This could lead to bee colonies going hungry and reduce their ability to pollinate the plants we rely on.

Mystery knee bone

A bone in our knees that was thought to have disappeared through evolution has made a surprising comeback. A new study from Imperial found that the small bone – called the fabella – is becoming more common. As the bone is so rare, scientists aren't sure what it does, but think that better nutrition could explain its resurgence.

Rainforest radio

Imperial have designed new audio recorders to capture the sounds of the rainforest in Borneo. The sound recordings will help scientists and local people study the effect of human activities – like logging – on the plants and animals living in the forest.

We've been busy here at The Invention Rooms. During half term, we ran our first Safe Camp Making Session with the London Sports Trust where local young people made their own 3D printed LED key rings. Back in April, we teamed up with our friends at the Royal College of Art to create fictional plants and flowers in our latest Creative Roots workshop.

Learning about tools like laser cutters, 3D printers and basic electronics at our Safe Camp Making Session.

Getting to grip with new gadgets with the What the Tech?! volunteers.

What we've been up to in the local community

Exploring the elements and 150 years of the Periodic Table with the Riverside Arts Group at our HF ArtsFest banner making workshop.

Designing plants with artist Rachel Hill at Creative Roots...

...and producing some marvellous creations.

Competition:
win a £50 dining voucher for Albertine's, Shepherd's Bush

Question:
Do you know where this garden is?

Send your answer to:
whitecity.community@imperial.ac.uk
by Friday 30 August.

Correct answers will be entered into a prize draw to win a £50 dining voucher for Albertine's, Shepherd's Bush.

Well done to our last winner, Anna Pitman, who spotted that the location in the photo was the Japanese Garden in Hammersmith Park.

“We’re building a unique network”

Open to any women living or working in the north of Hammersmith and Fulham, the Agents of Change network brings together women from a wide range of backgrounds to share their expertise, resources and ideas to drive positive social change.

Members of the network meet four times each year and are supported by a group of local organisations, champions and mentors to develop new ideas and projects that can make a real difference in our local community.

A key part of the network is the Agents of Change leadership programme. Designed by female community leaders, the six-month leadership programme is open to members of the network who are active in their community and looking to develop their leadership skills. Starting in October and running once a month, each session focuses on different aspects of leadership and professional development, including communication and influence, confidence, project management and networking.

The network and its leadership programme are providing an exciting platform to drive positive change in White City. We meet some of the people involved.

“This programme provides opportunities for personal growth, business development, and gaining new insights. It is the ideal programme to go on to do better for yourself and better for others.”

– Carol

Carol, Agents of Change member and programme graduate

Over the past five years, local resident and Agents of Change graduate Carol has built her own vegan and organic food business. She was recently made head chef at a nursery in Hammersmith and Fulham and is now developing a project in partnership with the nursery to encourage sustainability among children and their families.

“It’s a hugely important platform for local women to gain confidence, hone skills, network and ultimately step forward to empower themselves, their families and our communities”

– Kim Smith, Chief Executive of the London Borough of Hammersmith and Fulham

Kim, Agents of Change champion, Hammersmith and Fulham

“As a mentor for Agents of Change, I value being able to help women discover and bring out the best of themselves. I’d encourage anyone to become a mentor and support this network.”

– Betty Yue, Head of the Centre for Continuing Professional Development, Imperial
