In the summer of 2019, Imperial will collaborate with 20 neighbours across the Albertopolis, including some of the world’s most iconic museum’s and institutions, to create a unique festival lifting art, science, technology and curiosity.

Invoking the spirit of the first Great Exhibition in 1851, which one-third of the country’s population visited, The Great Exhibition Road Festival will offer a free weekend of discovery across the 29th & 30th of June 2019. It will mark the bicentenary of the birth of Queen Victoria, and Prince Albert, and takes inspiration from the Prince’s vision for the area as a dedicated centre for research, learning and creativity.

Imperial’s own Festival will be a part of this larger festival partnership, with exhibits, talks, workshops and activities on our own South Kensington Campus, as well as exciting partnerships with and in other institutions and on Exhibition Road itself.

The Great Exhibition Road Festival is a chance to showcase the sciences and the arts at their collaborative best, embracing the spirit of the pioneer that drove the creating of Albertopolis.

The event will be coordinated by the team behind Imperial’s own Festival, which attracted over 20,000 members of the public for its seventh iteration in 2018. For 2019, the organisers believe a similar ethos can help the Great Road Exhibition Festival provide an even larger platform for the College staff and students to engage new communities and audiences.

The organisers believe the range of partnering organisation will lead to unique collaborations between scientists, artists and other creative partners, giving the public the sort of one-off experiences that Exhibition Road uniquely placed to provide.
