

Four Thought

BBC Radio 4

Making Drugs Today

Series 4

Sunil Shaunak argues that pharmaceuticals could, and should, build social capital.

Arguing that the twin risks of rampant infectious disease and resistance to antibiotics represent a grave threat to our future, Sunil makes the case for ethical pharmaceuticals. Sunil's own background bridges the gap between academia and the pharmaceutical industry, and from this vantage point he has grown concerned that while the public sector puts up the initial financial capital, the return is often in purely financial terms, diminishing our shared social capital.

Producer: Giles Edwards.

Podcast

Duration: 20 minutes

First broadcast: Wednesday 01 October 2014

Broadcasts

Wed 1 Oct 2014

20:45

BBC Radio 4

Four Thought

Four Thought talks include stories and ideas which will affect our future, in politics, society, the economy, business, science, technology or the arts. Recorded live, the talks are given by people with a new thought to share.

The Best of Four Thought

